

Introduction

Only the leaders with great leadership qualities have introduced good to the world. These leaders have developed powerful leadership skills over the time and eventually become visionaries. They inspire their subordinates and drive them towards achieving their dreams in life. Therefore, developing powerful leadership skills help you to become an effective leader and make a difference in other's lives.

Good leaders are good in getting the desired outcome at the end. They are good at inspiring people and getting their contribution with their full support.

The good leaders constantly raise the standards and expectations from the employees, so the employees continuously enhance themselves. Employees and others follow such great leaders willingly.

Seven Most Powerful Leadership Skills

Let's have a brief look at the most powerful leadership skills that matter the most in corporate world.

1. Lead by Example

This is the number one skill you should develop. When there is a huge team working under you, setting the examples is the best way to manage them.

If you do not adhere to your own rules, you may not be able to get those working for you to adhere to the rules. When it comes to leading by examples, it includes fairness, honesty, showing respect and professionalism.

2. No Politics and No Good Old Boys

The workplace should never be run by politics and the good old boys. This could be the main reason for demotivating the talented and enthusiastic employees.

In case, if you reward the people you prefer, this will demotivate the talent in the organization and they would leave at the end of the day. The remaining employees will be utterly frustrated and company culture and productivity will never be the same.

3. Reward the Talent

Rewarding is a great way to enhance the employee satisfaction. A good leader identifies the talent in the employee and rewards appropriately. A good leader will use facts for assessing the employees for their performance rather than using perceptions for the same.

4. Be Accountable and Hold Other Accountable

Depending on the consequences of an event, there can be either negative or positive results. In a corporate environment, most of the time, people are reluctant to take the responsibility and be accountable when things go wrong.

If you are accountable for something, so be it. Show the employees that you are being responsible and send the message that you expect the same from them.

As a good leader, you should not tolerate poor performance and poor behaviour of your employees. Your tolerance may kill employee motivation. No employee will go an extra mile if they are to cover someone's work by doing that.

5. Performance Standards

Setting expectations and defining reasonable performance standards for the employees is one of the key leadership skills. The performance assessment and evaluation criteria for the employees should be transparent and it should allow the employees to find their way to success.

Standards are not only applicable for employee performance. You can set standards for many other aspects of the corporate environment. As an example, it could be how to behave in the office or how to write a quality document. Setting and practicing such high standards will enhance the careers of the employees as well as the organization in the long run.

6. Share Your Vision

Good leaders are visionaries. They have a vision for what they do. A powerful leadership skill is to share your vision with the rest of the employees.

This way, you make them aware of what you fundamentally believe in and there will be a lot of people, who are willing to help you. Eventually, you will be able to enhance their lives and make them visionaries as well.

7. Keep an Open Door Policy

Keeping an open door policy is a real skill for a great leader. Although many companies claim that they practice the open door policy, no one would really bother to escalate information through the open door.

In order to have a real open door policy running, the leader should first practice the policy and show the rest of the staff that information flow has no barriers.

Conclusion

Powerful leadership skills are the best way for you to achieve your professional and personal objectives. The power of leadership skills are noted and required when you climb the corporate ladder.

Without proper leadership skills, you may not be able to manage a large team and drive them to achieve the objectives. Therefore, start strengthening your leadership skills from now onwards and go through necessary trainings if required.

The Six Stages in Process-Based Management

(1) Defining the process

Process needs to be clearly identified and documented if it to yield any clarity.

Departmental documentation, customer-based agreements, purchasing manuals and process flow charts would all help in documenting the aforementioned process.

The input that is required for the process to be operational, the expected output of the process and the people or departments responsible for each constituent part of the process should be identified so that ownership and accountability are not compromised.

(2) Establishing measures to evaluate the process

Process performance needs to be measured, if the efficacy, quality and timelines are to be monitored and improved upon.

Ideally, the metrics selected should be quantifiable, so that clarity is retained throughout. However, this may not always be possible, but comparative data and relevant benchmarks can always be obtained for relevant analysis.

(3) Analyzing process performance

A variety of tools are available to analyze process performance with ease.

Graphical representations, bar charts, pie charts, variance analysis, gap analysis and cause-and-effect analysis being some of the most popular.

(4) Analyzing process stability and setting new objectives if required

Under this phase of process-based management, compliance audits would help in analyzing process stability.

If it is found to be wanting, new goals need to be set and these should be aligned to the company's strategic direction.

(5) Planning improvements

Process improvements should be planned in concurrence with the vision of the organization, its mission statement and its culture.

Sufficient resources should be allocated and an effective team should be in place if the proposed changes are to be successful.

(6) Implementation of improvements

This is where each of the planned improvements come to life from its former paper-based draft. Training can be conducted if and when required and the support of staff should be garnered wherever possible.

Thereafter, regular monitoring and continuous improvements need to be facilitated if the organization is to be one of world class standing.

Identifying a process-based organization

A process-based organization would have a few inherent characteristics that make it instantly recognizable.

For instance, such a company would view the business as a collection of processes, have strategic plans that drive the processes with commitment from the top management downwards, and such processes would be aligned to the goals and key business outcomes of the organization.

Standardization of processes, high dependence on data accuracy and the continuous quest for sustainable improvements are further hallmarks of a process-based organization.

Advantages of process-based management

The benefits of adopting process-based management are many.

Improvements in present processes increase in value-adding activities, reduction of costs and alignment to the strategic vision of the organization are its most sought after benefits.

It also facilitates modern cost allocation techniques such as activity based costing. Process-based management helps the system conform to certain national and international standards and to the requirements of reputed regulatory bodies.

Conclusion

Process-based management is an invaluable tool in customer satisfaction and retention, as it identifies key processes that have stakeholder interests and satisfaction at heart.

As many, a savvy manager at the higher echelons have come to realize the vision of a company is less likely to change over time, as opposed to goals and procedures used to achieve this vision.

Therefore process-based management necessitates managers to evaluate existing processes and take steps to adjust the structure and function of the organization in question, so that maximum efficiency can be thus derived.

Variable factors such as changes in customer expectations, fluctuations in the general economy and the necessity of developing better product lines will result in more innovative workforce who takes ownership of tasks and initiates better performance in their related field of expertise.